Makame Camp in Southern Masailand offers a rare opportunity to hunt in one of Tanzania's most unspoilt wilderness areas. Situated within the Makame Wildlife Management Area, the concession is deeply rooted in community conservation and provides a genuine Maasai cultural setting. This region is particularly well regarded for strong, hard-bossed buffalo, combined with low hunter density and classic East African safari conditions. It is ideal for clients seeking a traditional, immersive hunting experience rather than a commercialized destination.

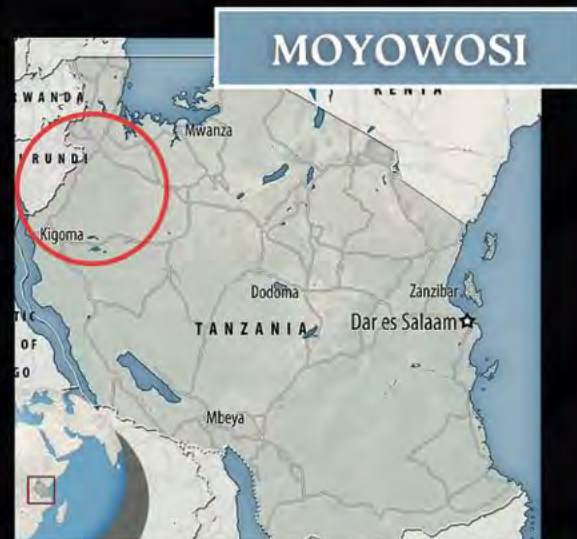

WESTERN TANZANIA- MOYOWOSI & MALAGARASI RIVER

Located close to the border of Burundi in the western reaches of Tanzania, resting comfortably on the edge of a plateau, is the 6,000 square kilometre Moyowosi Game Reserve. The Moyowosi Reserve is contiguous with Kigosi Game Reserve and is divided by the Moyowosi River and its affluent. Moyowosi is chiefly a floodplain wetland habitat, recently declared a RAMSAR Wetland of international importance. Gazetted in 1981, Moyowosi now provides a sanctuary for wildlife and migratory birds during the dry season. The riverways are home to crocodiles and hippos and tiger fish. Miombo woodlands and swamp regions provide a refuge for rare sitatunga antelopes, "dagga boys" and breeding water-birds.

The easiest way to access the reserve is via a scheduled flight departing from Dar es Salaam to the main area of Kigosi. Adventurous visitors can self-drive in a 4WD into the reserve.

Luangwa Valley

Without doubt, the Luangwa Valley is recognised as one of Africa's premier hunting destinations. South Luangwa National Park is the country's flagship national park known for its leopard sightings and concentrated hippo herds of the receding Luangwa River waters during the dry season. The valley lies between the impressive Muchinga escarpment and Nyika Plateau. The river banks are shaded by large, Vachellia trees (formerly Acacia trees), ebony and mahogany trees, whilst the interior open savanna habitats are dominated by mopane woodland and scrublands. Elephant, lion, leopard, buffalo and limited number of sable and roan antelope are the iconic species hunted in the region.

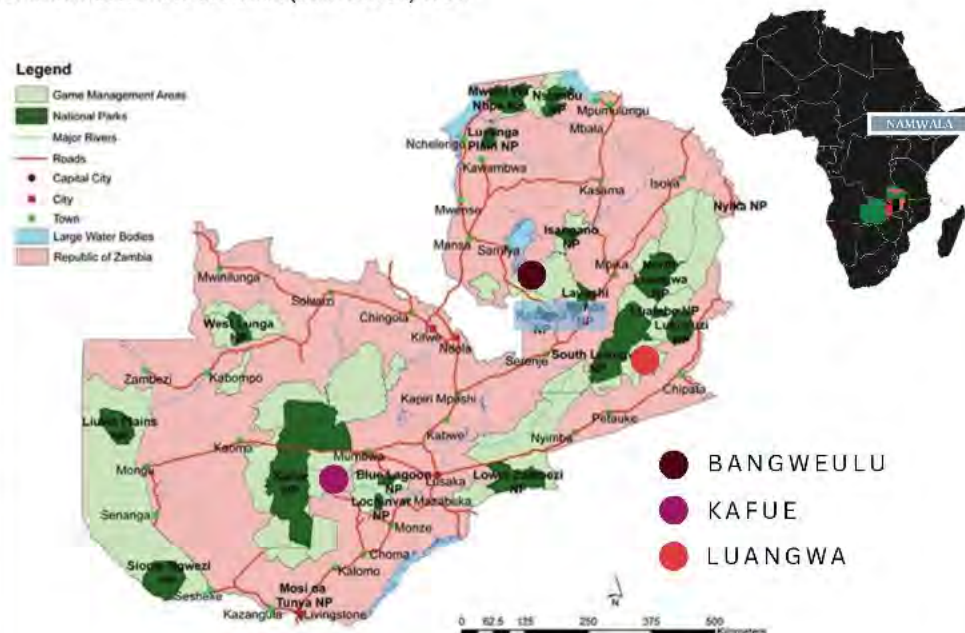

Kafue Region

This Kafue River and Kafue Flats region are named after the Kafue River which drains into the Zambezi River near the border town of Chirundu. The flats when flooded creates the most perfect Kafue lechwe habitat and wetlands attracting a variety of aquatic birds. The rest of the region is covered by miombo woodlands and well adapted to the many bushfires that flare up in the region. Game populations in some GMAs have declined due to poaching problems.

Bangweulu Swamps

This +6,000 km² swamp has been declared one of the world's most important wetlands and home to three sought after African aquatic species, black lechwe, Kafue lechwe and sitatunga. Of the three species, the sitatunga is the most difficult to hunt. Lookout platforms are purposely built to overlook the huge papyrus reedbeds and stretches of open water to patiently wait for a suitable trophy to break cover from the reeds to feed on the aquatic vegetation growing along the fringes of the impenetrable reedbeds.

These GMAs are classified according to their location, game numbers and huntable iconic species, all of which determine the GMA (concession) fees.
